American Methodism. GROWTH OF THE DENOMINATION IN ONE MCN DRED YEARS.

Statistics just published show that there are in round numbers 3,260,000 Methodists in old Quaker lady, another neighbor, who had the United States and Canada. Some idea may be formed of the growth of American Methodism by comparing these figures with Methodism by comparing these figures with the beginning made 108 years ago in New York, with five members, by Philip Embury; 700,000 added to the above figures will give the number of Methodist communicants throughout the world, 3,900,000. This result shows that the increase of Methodism in this country is beyond all comparison greater than that of the parent oburches in England. The different branches of the denomination in the United States and Canada stand in the following order as to numbers:

Lay Members. - Methodist Episcopal 1,563,521; Methodist Episcopal South, 667, $85; African Methodist Episcopal, 200,000 African Methodist Episcopai Zion, 164,000 United Brethren, 120,445; Methodist Church of Canada, 102,887; Evangelical Associa-tion, 90 240; Colored Methodist Episcopal, 67,888; Methodist, 65,000; Methodist Protestant, 65,000; Methodist Episcopal in Canada, 22,641; American Wesleyan, 20,000; Primitive Methodist (Canada), 6,699; Bible Christian (Canada), 6,194; Free Methodist, 6,000; Primitive Methodist, 2,000.

There are a few other bodies, such as Congregational and Welsh Calvinistic Methodist, which, in the aggregate, have only a small number of members. The statistics of the Methodist Episcopal church by decades show an increase in every instance but one, 1846, when a decrease was noted of 5,874, caused by the separation of the southern wing of the church. . The following is the record:

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which began its existence in 1844, is a very active organization, especially in missionary work, in the circulation of religious literature, and in efforts to improve and enlarge its educational institutions. The statistics of the Church for 1874 show that they have 35 annual conferences, 8 bishops, 8,715 preachers; increase, 349; 667 885 members; increase, 22,000; 7,019 Sunday-schools; increase, 119; 321,572 Sunday-school scholars; increase, 8,813.

The Paris correspondent of the New York Times writes this amusing account of the entrance of Jules Verne into what he has since found the flowery and profitable fields of literature :

Jules Verne's books now sell better than any others, and yet he had a very hard struggle at first, although he had Alexander Dumas for his friend. For twenty years he was a frequent visitor to the house of the author of "Monte Christo." Among his other friends was a queer character named D'Arpentigny, a former army officer, who pretended to have invented a new science— that of chirognomony. This was the art of reading the character of people upon their hands, or a sort of palmistry. Yet he was an agreeable companion, talked well, and furnished a vast amount of amusement with his mania for looking at everybody's hand. One day he dropped in upon Dumas. "One of my friends has shipped to me from Nantes --- " "Some fresh sardines!" interrupted Du-

"No; a young man who wants to enter the literary profession." "Le malbeureaux !" exclaimed Dumas "Why, in the world, could he not have made himself a grocer?" "It appears," said D'Arpentigny, "that he was not qualified. He did not have the necessary aptitudes. I have examined his hands, which, I must tell you, are full of manuscripts." "He is a lost man! What shall we do?"

"He wants to make your acquaintance." "Bring him to dinner."

The young man who responded to this invitation, and sat at Dumas's table the next day, was Jules Verne, author of the Tour du Monde, and other works famillar in every country. The next day he sent a comedy to Dumas, called "Les Pailles Rompues." It was read, and the great author's only reply was, "We will present that to the Theatre Historique." The piece was received and played with great success. Since then Jules Verne has devoted himself to these imaginary voyages, in which a traveller mounts his horse and starts off for the moon or elsewhere. He had a brilliant début, but it is only of late-that his works have become universally popular.

The correspondent of the Russian Gazette de l'Academie writes that an Englishman of the name of Hobbam was organizing a colossal undertaking, which was to cost 5,000,000 roubles, and evas nothing less than the diversion of the waters of the Arpatchai into channels to be cut throughout the length and breadth of the vast desert plain of Sardar Atad for its thorough fertilizaalready obtained the grant of the plain from the Russina Government. The works have from particulars and references, apply to L. A. commenced, and Mr. Hobham hoped to attract $100,000 Irish and German emigrants J. S. RAGLAND, who will put them up and give estimates.

The project of connecting the three principal rivers of Western Germany-viz., the Rhine, the Ems, and the Weser-by a canal is one of long standing, and has been recently again brought forward, more especially by persons interested in the coal industry and other important branches of production in Westphalia and Rhenish Prussia. It is said that the Prussian Government is inclined to lend its assistance towards the realization of the project. The Quincy Whig says that "a St. Louis man, who has got tired of being so far away from Quincy, has come here to live." He has only gone up there to pick his fall crop

How a Quakeress Storred Borbowing .-The subject of borrowing and leading came up in the course of a conversation with a subscriber of the Weekly Ithacon, living near Ithaca, when he suddenly recollected a funny reminiscence of that character which had happened in his own neighborhood. He said be had a neighbor whose family were great borrowers, but not so distinguished as paymasters—they were always borrowing, but seldom, if ever, rereturning the exact amount borrowed. An mode of eventually putting a stop to the nuisance. Keeping her own counsel, the next time her good man went to town he had a separate and express order to purchase a pound of the best tea and also a new canister to put it in. As he knew she already had plenty of tea and also a canister, he was puzzled to determine what the old lady wanted of more tea and a new canister, but by his questioning and reasoning elicited nothing more than a repetition of the order. "Jim, did I not tell thee to get me a pound of the best tea and a new canister? Now, go and do as I bid thee." And go along he did, and when he came home at night the tea and new 'canister were his companions. The old lady took them from him with an amused expression on her usually placid features, and, depositing the tea in the canister, she set it on the shelf for a special use. It had not long to wait, for the borrowing neighbor had frequent use for the aromatic herb. The good lady loaned generously, emptying back jin the cannister any remittance of borrowed teas which the neighbor's conscience inclined her to make. Time went on, and after something less than the one hundredth time of borrowing, the neighbor again appeared for "just another drawing of tea," when the oft-visited tea-canister was brought out and found to be empty, and the good old lady and obliging neighbor was just one pound of tea poorer than when she bought the canister, which now only remained to tell the story. Then she made a little characteristic speech, perhaps the first in her llfe. She said: " Thou seest that empty canister. I filled it for thee with a pound of best tea, and I have lent it all to thee in driblets, Offenbach is again in the ascendant, with his Madame L'Archidue, for which Theo, the wily, dainty, and Jolie Parfumeuse, has vacated Les Bouffes, and Judie (Mad. L'Archiduc) entered into a triumphant possession. Offenbach, baton in band, led the orchestra, and seemed fairly distraught with the excitement of the occasion. He alternately glared and smiled from audience to orchestra, from orchestra to stage. He would beat the air wildly, and never noticed that more than once his baton came in contact with something more substantial, in the shape of the bald pate of an unlucky violinist, whose CORN AND FLOUR EXCHANGE contorted visage and increased scratching alone told the story of his woe.

and put into it all thou hast sent me in return, and none but thyself bath taken therefrom or added unto it, and now thou seest it empty; therefore, I will say to thee, thou

The music of Madame L'Archiduc has almost in a day become the most popular of all popular music. It is fairly tantalizing in its contagious melody, and at Judic's great song, "A good little man no taller than that," the audience caught the refrain en masse, and now all Paris rings with it .-Paris letter-Baltimore Gazette.

> The Old Home. BY WILL WALLACE HARNEY.

An out-door quiet held the earth, Reneath the winter moon, The cricket chirped in cosy mirth, And the kettle crooned, upon the hearth, A sweet, old-fashloned tune.

The old clock ticked, a drowsy race, With the clicking of the cricket, And red coals in the chimney-place Peeped out, with many a rosy face, The crane's arm empty, stuck out stiff,

And tinware on the shelves Twinkled and winked at every gliff, In the flickering firelight, as if They whispered to themselves. The good dame, in her ruffled cap,

Counted her stitches slowly, And the old man, with full many a gap, Read from the Big Book on his lap The good words, wise and holy. The old clock clicked; the old man read,

His deep voice pausing, lowering;
The good wite nodded, dropped her head—
The lids of both were heavy as lead—
They were sound asleep and snoring. Oh, hale old couple! sweet each dream, While-all the milk-pans tilting-

Puss paints her whiskers in the cream, Till John and the belated team Bring Maggie from the quilting.

May Time, I pray, when failing years
Make thin my voice and thrapple,
Find my last cays of life like theirs,
As sweet with children's love and prayers,
And like a wider apple. [Scribner's for December.

What the Chimney Sang

Over the chimney the night wind sang
And chanted a melody no one knew;
And the woman stopped as the babe she tossed,
And thought of the one she had long since lost,
And said, as her tear-drops back she forced,
"I hate the wind in the chimney."

Over the chimney the night-wind sang Over the chimney the night-wind sang
And chanted a melody no one knew;
And the children said as they closer drew,
"'Tis some which that is cleaving the black night through—
'Tis a fairy trumpet that just then blew,
And we fear the wind in the chimney."

Over the chimney the night-wind sang, And chanted a melody no one knew; And the man, as he sat on his hearth below, Said to himself, "It will surely snow, Andfuel is dear, and wages low, Over the chimney the night-wind saug And chauted a melody no one knew;

But the Poet listened and smiled, for he Was Man, and Woman, and Child, all three, And he said, "It is God's own harmony, This wind that sings in the chimney." BRET HARTE
